

Having spent some time designing lower frequency powerline communications I know there will be a problem with both interference and security when transmitting broadband over powerlines. I am also afraid of the potential interference with power control signals. It is too easy to have two close frequencies beat to form a low frequency signal that could easily trip a breaker or switch. Please reconsider this proposition.